

MATERIAL FOR A PLACE-NAME SURVEY OF EAST STIRLINGSHIRE

compiled by John Reid

Preface

by Simon Taylor

It is with great pleasure that the Scottish Place-Name Society presents on its website this unparalleled collection of east Stirlingshire material painstakingly brought together over several decades by John Reid. It contains all the data necessary for a full place-name survey and analysis of an area which is central both historically and geographically to Lowland Scotland: spatial details, early forms, dates and sources, many of them unpublished, along with the full context in which these forms occur, giving invaluable information about land-holding, land-use and land-value over time for approximately 1,300 named places. It is thus not only a superb resource for the toponymist and historical linguist, it is also an unrivalled quarry for the local historian and genealogist, with the Sources and Bibliography representing what is assuredly the most comprehensive ever for the study area. Presented here as a downloadable and fully searchable pdf, this is the 'raw data' behind John Reid's recent book The Place-Names of Falkirk and East Stirlingshire (2009; full details at the end of the Introduction, below). While this data contains minimum discussion, for some names the author does give probable or possible parallels from other parts of Scotland, referencing any discussions of the analogous names; for others he usefully cites relevant material from DSL dsl.ac.uk, the online version of the two Scots Language Dictionaries DOST and SND.

Given the massive amount of material contained in this document, which was collected over many years and runs to over a thousand A-4 pages, typographical and transcription errors are bound to have crept in. Please inform me if you spot any such errors, and these will be rectified. There will also, needless to say, be small inconsistencies of presentation, but, unless they actually mislead or impede understanding, no attempt will be made at this stage to iron them out.

With this data now widely available, in conjunction with the analysis and discussion of many of these names in Reid 2009, it is a relatively small step to producing a full place-name survey of these nine parishes. In this way Reid has paved the way for a county-wide survey of the place-names of Stirlingshire (within its pre-1975 boundaries) (STL). Stirlingshire consisted of 22 parishes in total when it was dissolved in 1975, and it is these that would provide the frame-work of any such survey. All the Stirlingshire parishes are listed below in alphabetical order, with their standard three-letter abbreviations,¹ as well as some brief notes. In addition to Reid's nine parishes (given in bold in the list) another three have been subjected to expert toponymic analysis, in two University of Glasgow PhD theses:

1) McNiven, Peter E., 2011, 'Gaelic Place-names and the Social History of Gaelic Speakers in Medieval Menteith', unpublished PhD thesis, University of Glasgow available online <http://theses.gla.ac.uk/2685/>

This includes the parish of Kippen KPN, formerly partly in STL, partly in Perthshire (Menteith) (PER), but after 1891 entirely in STL.

2) Drummond, Peter, 2014, 'An analysis of toponyms and toponymic patterns in eight parishes of the upper Kelvin basin', unpublished PhD thesis, University of Glasgow [Baldernock STL, Cadder LAN, Campsie STL, Cumbernauld DNB, Kilsyth STL,² Kirkintilloch DNB, New Monklands LAN, Old Monklands LAN] available online <http://theses.gla.ac.uk/5270/>

The initials of these three toponymists have been added [in square brackets] after the relevant parishes in the list below. This leaves only 10 parishes, just under half of the total, in need of expert toponymic attention, and these are given in italics in the list.

Not only has John Reid's work laid solid foundations for all future work on Stirlingshire, his willingness to make his rich data available in this way is generous and inspirational. I would like to express sincere thanks to him on behalf of the membership of the Scottish Place-Name Society, as well as of all those working on any aspect of the origin and development of place-names in Scotland and beyond.

Introduction

These notes and data have been compiled over a period of about thirty years. When they were begun there was no intention to publish them; indeed there was no intention of any kind. Their origin, like so many things, was due to curiosity and the collection in the early years was as structured as my untutored approach to stamp collecting when a boy. Lacking a formal discipline meant that notes were written in various jotters, notebooks, scraps of paper and diaries. Eventually, they were entered into an increasing number of loose-leaf folders in handwritten form, the earliest being laid out with a page to a parish, then several pages to a parish before the realisation came that this was a monster; one that needed greater control. Visually, at least, the acquisition of a typewriter (and many bottles of correction fluid) brought a new order; one that was to be advanced with the arrival of the computer age.

Assembling this material in some sort of order was only one problem I had to face in pursuit of the genie I had let out of the bottle. Living in Falkirk meant there was no easy access to sources; to do most of my research involved countless trips to Edinburgh or Glasgow. But it wasn't just the logistics that provided obstacles: as can be imagined, not having studied Latin was a huge stumbling block which had to be overcome. This was done, for the most part, with a dictionary, much perseverance and the kindly forbearance of the Classics Master of the school in which I taught. I believe that a level of aptitude was obtained that allowed me to get the gist of charters and sasines provided the scrivener had stuck to the script. Frequent departures from it often led me into murky waters fraught with perils that must surely lead to my severe embarrassment; but, happily for me, this could only happen if I were able to recognise the end result. Which brings me to the point of this tak tent: it is to forewarn all who use these notes. As far as possible I have attempted to signal documents translated from Latin by me with the use of [L] preceding the passage. In many instances this will appear superfluous but the use of ‘replace all’ is the most likely culprit on these occasions. It must be pointed out that, in the process of simultaneously translating and transcribing it was Scottish equivalents that came to mind and so, for example, ‘All and Hail’ rather than ‘All and Whole’ will be found along with other vernacular words and terms in the translations. Another problem, albeit a lesser one, was reading secretary script. A few years prior to retirement, I attended the extra-mural class on ‘Reading Scottish Handwriting’ at Register House in Edinburgh and then reinforced this by repeating the exercise immediately following retirement. I believe I had two advantages in this area. Firstly, my aptitude in visual art allowed me to view the letter forms as design elements. The other was that for many years I have been using typescripts of the six volumes of the records of the baron court of Falkirk and Callendar as a source for both local history and place-name studies and this frequent exposure to seventeenth century Scots meant that I had less difficulty transcribing the language of the texts we dealt with than did many of my classmates (particularly the two ladies from Morningside). For these reasons I feel more confident in presenting that particular strand of material.

The leading line for each place-name has the head-name in upper case letters, which is followed by,

1. Where appropriate, a hash symbol (#) to indicate that the name, as far as can be ascertained, is now obsolete.

2. The abbreviation for the relevant Civil Parish. These are:

AIH Airth

BKX Bothkennar [since the 18th century part of GRM]

DNY Denny

DPC Dunipace

FAK Falkirk

GRM Grangemouth

KSY Kilsyth

LRB Larbert

MAS Muiravonside

SLM Slamannan

3. A four-figure National Grid Reference (NGR). When applied to rivers and streams this is at the mouth, the confluence with a larger water course, or the place where the name changes.
4. The form used for accuracy of locations is a simplified version of that used by Simon Taylor in The Place-Names of Fife [PNF]: a numeric value within square brackets following the NGR is used to indicate the degree of accuracy: [1] for absolute accuracy, [2] assumed on the basis of contextual evidence, [3] places it within any adjacent kilometre square while [4] shows that it is or was within the given parish.
5. Where ascertained, a six-figure NGR

Early forms of each head-name are given in bold in the relevant entries.

An extended bibliography is included for the reason that not all of the sources found in the notes are quoted in the book (Reid 2009). In the instance of General Roy’s Military Survey the date has been rounded off to 1755 which I believe should give ± 2 years accuracy and, similarly, Pont’s map of Stirlingshire is simplified to 1590.

All of the place-names are touched upon at one level or another in my book The Place-Names of Falkirk and East Stirlingshire, published in December 2009 by the Falkirk Local History Society (ISBN 9780956048011 Price £11.99 + £3.01 pp).

ABBEYTOWN BRIDGE	AIH NS8986 [1]	NS896865
1628 RS58/4 f. 120	Abbottoun Brig
1723 Macfarlane f.412	Another [bridge] a little south west from Airth called the Abbeytown bridge of two arches upon the road between Airth and Falkirk
1865 OSNB	Abbeytown Bridge A small stone bridge of one arch over the Pow Burn, it is so called from an abbey having once stood in its vicinity, but so completely has the work of destruction been done at the Reformation that even its site cannot now be pointed out. This bridge was erected about twenty years ago upon the spot where an old one stood, no vestige of which now remains. The old name is however still retained but applied to the bridge now existing.

Stirlingshire No 460 records the panel on the existing bridge as:

FOUNDED UPON/WOOD AND/REBUILT BY THE/SHIRE 1726

In the 12c David I as part of his grant to the monastery of Holyrood, gave the Kirk of Airth and twenty six acres of land to that foundation. The abbey's land-holding was evidently subsequently added to and the bridge name would suggest the existence of a township in the area.

PARISHES of MEDIEVAL SCOTLAND, IAN COWAN, SCOT.REC.SOC. EDINBURGH 1967

Diocese: St Andrews; deanery: Linlithgow

[1128 Holyrood]	The church of Hereth was granted to Holyrood by David I and confirmed to the abbey by Robert, bishop of St Andrews, c1130 (Holyrood Liber, nos. 1-2). A vicarage settlement took place in 1275, the parsonage thereafter remaining with the abbey (ibid no. 75; MS Book of the Assumption of Benefices, GRH, Edin., 104, 163-4; Airth Writs nos. 26, 49)

1776 GD65/223	Papers relating to the action between the minister of the parish of Airth and the heritors thereof: (1) Scheme of the proven rental of the parish of Airth. Dated 27 July 1771. (2) Rental of the parish of Airth and account of stipend presently paid to the minister of Airth. Dated 1771. (3) Copy of Rectified Locality of the stipend of the parish of Airth. Dated 17 July 1776. 1771-1776
1865 OSNB	The parish of Airth is in the presbytery of Stirling, synod of PER and Stirling. It is generally supposed that the word Airth is derived from the Gaelic ard or ardhe, signifying a hill, and if this supposition be correct, it furnishes strong grounds for the opinion that the parish, which for the most part presents a complete level, owes its name to what is well known by the appellation of the Hill of Airth. It is bounded on the north by the Forth; on the east by the same river; on the south by the parishes of Bothkenner and Larbert; and on the west by the parish of St Ninians. With the exception of the Hill of Airth, and the rising grounds of Dunmore Park, the parish forms an entire plain. And, although there are no records for enabling us to fix the precise [origins], yet, from the strata of shells found at no great depth throughout the whole of the low ground, it may be reasonably inferred that those once formed the bed of the river, and that vessels were to be seen spreading their white sails to the wind, where the husbandman now pursues his peaceful occupation. As an historical incident of some importance, it may be mentioned that, in 1817, when cutting the line of road which leads from Airth to Stirling the workmen came upon the skeleton of a whale. The skeleton was found to the north of the mansion house of Dunmore Park, and upwards of a mile from the bank of the river. It was traced to the extent of 75 feet. Falkirk is the nearest market town, distant six miles. There are two villages, Airth and Dunmore. The length of the turnpike road in the parish is about 8 miles. The situation of the parish church is central, being about 3 1/2 miles distant from the northern extremity of the parish, and nearly as much from the southern. It was first opened for public worship on the 20th February 1820, and consequently it is in excellent repair. It is built for the accommodation of 800 individuals. the sittings are all free, the tenants being accommodated by their respective landlords, and about 60 sittings set apart for the poor. The manse was finished in 1815. The glebe, including the site of the manse and garden, is upwards of 10 acres in extent. The stipend is 18 chalders of victual, half barley, half meal, payable by the highest [heritors?] of the County; and 8L 6s 8d for the Communion elements.

There is a Burgher meeting house in the parish. The minister is paid from the seat rents and collections. Stipend allowed about £100 per annum. Statistical Account for 1842

The parish contains about 6388 Statute Acres. there are no detached portions of Airth parish, and there are no detached parts of any other parishes within it.

The vicarage of Airth belonged Holyrood Abbey. Its church was dedicated to St Peter. A fair of St Peter was held at Airth. [FASTI 1923]

1865 OSNB	A small village pleasantly situated at the foot of Airth Hill, and a quarter of a mile from the Firth of Forth. The houses are mostly two storeys and tiled. A good number of them in bad repair, and a few in ruins. It contains three churches, two schools, a post office, and five public houses. Population in 1851 was 517. The villagers are chiefly employed among the farmers in the neighbourhood. William Graham esq., Airth Castle, principal proprietor. What is known as Airth Harbour is in a dilapidated state that even small boats cannot approach it with safety.
1865 OSNB	[Cross] A square pillar surrounded by a flight of steps on an octagon pedestal. It is surmounted by an antique figure, and bearing the coat of arms of the Elphinstone family who were at one time extensive proprietors in the parish. The date 1692 is on it, but it is evidently of an earlier period.
AIRTH CASTLE	AIH NS9087[1] NS900875
1865 OSNB	A large and irregularly built mansion, part of which was erected as far back as the 13th century, and about 40 years ago a handsome modern front was added to it on the north side. The name of Wallace is associated with Airth Castle as tradition states that it was here he surprised and slew a party of English soldiers who garrisoned it and this incident is partly borne out by one of the towers of the building being still called Wallace's Tower. The southern part of the building presents an aspect ruly antique and medieval, with its angular turrets, small windows, slate roof, and the usual serrated gables of old Scottish mansions. The grounds and approaches are remarkably fine. Property and residence of William Graham Esq., by whose ancestors it has been possessed for centuries.

AIRTH CHURCH [OLD]	AIH NS9087[1] NS900868
1610 RMS vii 373	The king [etc] grants to Lord John Bruce of Airth, knight, - the Hill of Airth with 2 oxgangs thereof, with the fishing of salmon, the grilsis and smoltis upon the water of Forth and the Pow of Airth, sheriffdom of Stirling:- which item John has resigned;- with the tiend sheaves and the tiends and duties of rectory and vicarage of the church and parish of Airth ..., which church the late John, Lord of Halyrudehous ... resigned
1865 OSNB	This was the ancient parish church and was used as a place of worship prior to the erection of the modern one near the village. There is no doubt from the appearance of the building that it was erected at a period anterior to the Reformation. Some of the dates on the building are as far back as 1450. There are no records to show, nor no information can be obtained, as to what its dedicatory name was. There is a graveyard attached to the church and small vaults used as places of internment by the Graham family. Property of William Graham Esq., Airth Castle, Airth
AIRTH CHURCH [NEW]	AIH NS8987[1] NS898876
1865 OSNB	A very handsome Gothic building erected in 1820 by the heritors. It has accomodation for 700 sitters. Minister's stipend £281 with a glebe valued at £27, and a manse. The sittings are all free, the tenants being all accomodated by their respective landlords, and about 60 sittings set apart for the poor.

1865 OSNB	[Cross] A monolith about 6 feet in height, and resting on a rude pedestal. It is the remains of an ancient cross, the transverse portion having been destroyed, probably at the date of the the Reformation. From this circumstance it is popularly known as the ' Headless Cross ' in the locality

1809 AOS 6089	George, Lord Keith of Bandeath and Stonehaven Marischal, seised ... in the right and privilege of the Ferry and ferry boats over the River Forth at the passage commonly called Higgins Neuk - on Disposal by James Bruce of Powfoulis G.R. 838.94
1828 SJ&A	Notice of Bill ... to regulate and maintain a Ferry from Kincardine to a certain place called Higgins Neuk, for erecting and maintaining piers and other necessary works, or reconstructing, repairing and keeping in repair those already erected, increasing tolls, purchase of houses and gardens etc.
1888	The cattle boat during tryst time was towed backwards and forwards on a hired tug boat. The cattle boat was 50 feet long, flush decked with a rail four feet high all round except for a hinged portion that was lowered down to the level of the pier, so that the animals could walk aboard.
1890	The railway bought the ferry and restricted it to foot passengers and cyclists.
1936	The Silver Link bridge was opened and the ferry passed out of existence.

1773 NLS MS10865 (13)	Airth Mill taken over by Robert Archibald, a new tenant. Graham pursuing relatives of deceased tenant for payment of repairs. Estimate of mason work required given by Thomas Paterson of St Ninians. However, it was claimed that this was for a new ashlar gable to replace one which was sound and not leaning. Also included a damhead - "The dam was never the work of a tradesman, but a parcell of stones thrown in as they appear at present, and the thirle is in use to uphold such, and a short while of a day will rickle it up as well as ever it was". New doors not really required, merely to maintain and leave in a good condition the miln, kiln, dams & damheads.
1773 NLS MS10876 (58)	12 Nov. Mill dams, damheads, houses, etc should all be inspected before a new tenant takes over, as they should be in a sufficient habitable and tenantable condition at the beginning of a lease. Previous tenant's heirs (Hodge) refuse to allow this and so it will be necessary to "give a petition to your own Barron Baillie, setting furth, that by the tack granted by your father to Arch. Hodge, he became bound, at removing from the subjects set to him, to leave the mill dams, damheads, houses & c and the machinery & utensils belonging to the mills in a sufficient heritable, tenentable and workable condition but that the said Arch, Hodge being now dead and his heirs removed from the possession of the subjects set, these subjects are not left in the condition required by the tack, on the contrary, that they are in very bad order, yet his heir refuses to name a man to be joined to one to be named by you to inspect the said subjects, and ascertain what it will cost to put them in sufficient order and condition. Therefore craving that the Baillie will appoint two skillfull men to visit and inspect the said subjects, and to report in writing what it will cost to put them in sufficient order & condition and that the Bailie will decern Hodge's heir to pay you what ever sum the valuator's shall report the expence to be..." Alexr Milne, Carron.

1784 NLS MS10876 (285) 4 Dec. "You may perhaps recolect that several years ago I spoke to you on the view I then had of running away moss through Mr Cunninghams Estate of Throsk for permission to take the waters of a well and what other waters go from my grounds of Cowie to your mill at Airth at such time as you had plenty of water so as to be able to spare them without infeiring your mill, the scheme for running away moss did not at that time take place: having now settled on a plan with Mr Cuningham for the running away the moss I beg leave to renew my application ..." Wm Murray, Polmaise.

c.1798 NLS MS10854 (235) "Articles of the sett of the subjects after mentioned belonging to William Graham of Airth Esquire, viz All and Haill the said Wm Graham his miln and kilns of Airth with the multures, sequels, knaveship, bannock and other dues priviledges & services used and wont and haill sucken belonging thereto with the houses, barns, stables, byres, cotehouses and yards belonging thereto, together with the whole lands & teinds thereof lately possessed by the deceast Archd Hodge tenant of the said Mills of Airth, except the rig called Hodge's Rig, which is hereby declaerd not to be included in the said sett but expressly excepted therefrom, and with the whole loans, ditches, stanks, grass, mill and lands, as the same were lately possessed by the said deceased Archd Hodge & his cottars, & extending to thirty seven acres two roods & twenty five falls Scots measure or thereby, exclusive of Hodges Rig, with the piece of grass ground between the two bridges called the Tongue and with the priviledge of the moss and commonty upon the moss of Airth, for casting, winning, leading & away taking of peats, turves & divots for the service of the said mill, kilns, house and hail other pertinents belonging or which were in use to belong to the said mills, lands, houses and others...

1825 NLS MS 10857 (201) Jan 25: David Nicol, 73 years old, Stewart, miller and residenter at Airth Mill for upwards of 50 years, considered that all the water of the different springs and groundless wells were the property of the Mill. Those who had previously diverted part of this water were forced to remove their dams.

1825 NLS MS 10857 (17) Another estimate required, Graham suggested Duncan Campbell, mason in Stirling, James Malice and Archibald Buchan, wrights in St Ninians. Hodge names Thomas Mitchell of Mungall miln & milnwright, William Dobbie of Larbert Miln, miln wright, John Brown, mason in Falkirk, Thomson, mason at Lawriestoun, John Melvine, tenant in Abbotshaugh & Hugh Smith at Skaithmuir.

1825 NLS MS 10857 (21) Estimate of repair costs: includes thatch for barn, dwelling house, miln, big kiln, little kiln,

- house next to the dam (dryster's?), 3 houses below the brae. Also a pan for big kiln and 3 houses.
- 1825 NLS MS 10857 (23) Duties of thirle only include annual cleaning of miln dam and leading home of miln stones when necessary.
- 1825 NLS MS 10857 (24) Last time the thirles carried stones for the damhead was some 47 years ago, which means that Archibald had never drawn upon this as a right during his tenancy.

Saving the Dunmore parks extending to about 200 acres and the lawn surrounding Airth Castle consisting of 70 acres there is little or no pasture. There are between 300 and 400 acres of moss some of it to the depth of 16 feet covering ground of most excellent quality. Part of the moss is covered with a thriving plantation whilst by far the greater part of it is in the hands of tenants or as they are called Moss Lairds who by dint of hard labour are gradually removing it. They are paid for the land when cleared at the rate of L 24 per imperial acre whilst the land so cleared is measured off once every four years and a rent exacted for it amounting to about L 2 per acre.

(Ex Simon Taylor's correspondence)

Letham itself derives from G leathan 'broad slope'. See Watson, 1926, 284 and 518 (note). This is a common place-name element in eastern Scotland. In Fife it is found for example in Letham CRA (PNF 3), Lethans DFL (PNF 1), Letham MML (PNF 4), Letham IKG (PNF 1) and Letham SCO (PNF 2). All are situated on marked slopes.

POTTERFIELD # AIH NS8987 [4]

1791 AOS 2042 Potterfield, parish of Airth

Note:Pottery was produced on the Estate of the Earl of Dunmore near Airth, in Stirlingshire, from the 1790s. At that time, it was a typical estate pottery, producing bricks and tiles for building repairs, and domestic pots for local use. All of its wares were made from the carse clay, dug on the estate, a process which unearthed 8000 year-old whalebones, deposited on the Carse of Stirling by a tsunami or giant tidal wave. The early wares were not particularly distinctive.

Note:	Keir is an anglicised form of British caer . As keir it is a common element in place-names, particularly in places where the remains of early native forts are present. However, Watson [CPNS p.366] observes that there can be confusion with Gael. cathair . Johnstone (PNS) believed that in this instance the reference was to the Roman fort at Castlecary which lies at a considerable distance to the south of Bankier, however, without doubt the name derives from the now lost fort at Bankier described in Stirlingshire No. 498 as an earthwork, the site of which may formerly have been known as Dunglass or Dunbass.

Note 2: Denny Abbey is a former abbey near Waterbeach, six miles (10 km) north of Cambridge in Cambridgeshire, England. The site, on an ancient road between Cambridge and Ely, was settled by farmers as early as the Roman period. A group of Benedictine monks, governed from Ely, moved here from their waterlogged monastery at Elmeney (a vanished settlement about a mile to the northeast) in the 1150s, at the suggestion of Duke Conan IV of Brittany. They built a church, Denny Priory, which opened in 1159. The crossing and transepts are the only parts of the original Priory that remain today. In 1169 the monks returned to Ely and the site was handed to the Knights Templar. The Templars built a number of additions, including a large Norman-style arched doorway and an infirmary. By the 1290s the Knights had lost their power, and in 1308 King Edward II had the entire order arrested and imprisoned, confiscating their property. Denny was given to the Hospitallers, who took no active interest in the property.

 Stirlingshire No. 498 Earthwork, Bankier (Site). ... The unknown author whose note is preserved in Macfarlane' concludes his list with a structure "over against Castle Carry at Dunglass". No place bearing this name has been noted in the lands N. of Castle Cary, and it might have been thought that the name Dunglass was applied to the structure at Bankier; but Pont includes in his inventory two names, "Bankyr" and "Dunbass", and despite the difference in spelling between "Dunglass" and "Dunbass", it may be supposed that both referred to one and the same structure and that therefore Bankier was distinct from this. Sibbald shows "Banker" at this place.

HERMITAGE - THE	# DNY NS7584 [1] sic 1879) NS756844
1841 NSA	In the division called Temple Denny, and within a mile of the new bridge over Carron, on the road to Fintry, about five miles west from Denny, there is a cascade called Auchinlilly-lin-spout. In the first year of the present century, the wild natural beauties of the spot were transformed into a sort of fairyland, by the genius of Robert Hill, Esq., W/S. Edinburgh, who had purchased the lands of Forest Hill, of which it is a part. A rustic cottage of whinstone, with the angular points facing one in all directions, was built on the very margin of a deep fissure, through which the waters of the Carron flow, to be tossed over the rock of Auchinlilly, within perhaps six yards of the heath covered cottage. There were a kitchen, a cellar, and other apartments; and also a stable was dug chiefly out of the rock, below the level of the floor of the cottage. On that floor, were a handsome dining-room, drawing-room, and two small bed-rooms. A spacious window in the dining-room fronted, westward, the rushing waters as they fell over the rock into the fissure, in their course to the spout. The river was seen, for some way up its channel, diffused in comparative largeness of expansion, and studded with tiny rocks, which might be reached when the waters were low. At other times, the river, swollen by the rains around Muckle Bin, from which it takes its rise, and by the various feeders of the Carron between the Bin and Auchinlilly, rushing forward in roaring majesty, presented a magnificent spectacle from the dining room window. On one occasion, the stream having suddenly risen much above its usual elevation, struck the dining-room window with its surges, and, increasing in strength, burst the window, and, rushing into the kitchen and cellar, made a new cataract over the rock adjoining the spout, into the channel of the river. No lives were lost. The damage was speedily repaired, and, to prevent in future such accidents, a deep excavation in the rock was made in front of the cottage, through to its east rocky banks, sufficient to receive any future overflowings. It was arched over, and thereby easy access, as formerly, to the entrance to the cottage was provided. The banks on each side of the river were planted; walks were made along their sloping sides, with resting-places at proper stations, for enjoying the picturesque beauties of the scene. A carriage way from the turnpike, from Denny to Fintry, was formed down to the cottage. A bridge of plank, close to the spout, was thrown over the fissure, which divides Denny parish from St Ninians, to give access to the garden on the other side. For a time, it was the resort of the curious, who came even from a distance to see and enjoy the scenery of the Cliffs of Carron, the name by which it was known. A mother's fear for her offspring, amidst so many perils, soon made the amiable and accomplished lady of the property, a stranger to its beauties. The last interesting inhabitant of this once enchanting and still beautifully wild place, was the widowed sister of the amiable Graham, the Sabbath poet. Since she left it, some dozen years ago, it has gradually decayed, and has at the present only the ruins of its beauty remaining. It is now the property of Archibald Wishart, Esq., W.S. Deputy-Keeper of the Register of Sasines, Edinburgh.

1879 Gillespie p 95

Two miles further on its course [the Carron], we have the Auchin-lilly-linn, which, when the river is in flood, and a triumphant torrent sweeps down the glen, is a cataract almost unsurpassed for the roar of its liquid thunder and the grandeur of its storm of spray. The ruins of the Hermitage, too, are to be seen firm as any rock in the centre of the stream. During the summer months, this secluded nook is naturally a great resort of local pic-nic parties.

1879 Gillespie p 97

But once down upon the Carron, the scene in its wild rocky grandeur must take many, as it did ourselves, by surprise. It is, from river bank to river bed, a strikingly picturesque spot. The Hermitage, now utterly desolate - roof fallen, windows gone, and crumbling gables ivy and lichen draped - was built by a Mr Hill, of Edinburgh, whose master-passion must certainly have inclined to the delights of shrieking solitude. It is a most romantic building, and was regularly occupied until 1840. Shortly after that period, a reservoir situated further up the river, broke through its embankments, when the terrific down-rush of water carried away much of the masonry of the deserted house.

Note: The RMS entries given with an asterisk look like a perpetuated error for Little Denovan DPC, which does not otherwise appear in those charters as should be expected. These entries place 'Little Denny' with the Dunipace holdings rather than those of South Herbertshire to which it rightly belongs.

1846 Lewis	Denovan, a village, in the parish of Dunipace, county of Stirling, 5 miles (W. N. W.) from Falkirk; containing 104 inhabitants. This village, which is chiefly inhabited by persons employed in calico-printing works, is situated on the north bank of the river Carron, amidst scenery of pleasingly picturesque character, the effect of which is heightened by the graceful tower of the parish church rising above the surrounding foliage, and the handsome residence of the proprietor. The works were established by Mr. Adam, in 1800, and afford employment to about 400 persons, of whom the greater number are resident in the town of Denny, on the opposite side of the Carron. In addition to these persons, engaged in the regular printing departments, are nearly 200 children, chiefly girls, of whom some are occupied in attendance on the printers, and others in sewing and fringing shawls.

 1301 Bain v, 262 Privy Seal writ from Edward [I] to the treasurer or his lieutenant and the barons and chamberlains of exchequer. The king complains that he is still seriously short of money, so that none of his promises to pay his troops have been kept and many men have deserted. This situation grows worse daily. But for lack of money, he would have completed the bridge across the Firth of Forth; he is sure that if he had crossed 'this season' he would have done such exploit against his enemies that his business would have quickly reached a satisfactory and honourable conclusion. ... since the king intends to spend the winter in Scotland - writ signed at Dunipace

At about the same time (c. 1398) a question of possession arose as to four oxgates of land within and without the town of Dunipace, within the Earl's barony of Harbertshire in Stirlingshire, which were claimed by the abbey of Cambuskenneth and John Keir. At the instigation of the latter the Earl of Douglas for some time displaced the abbot and convent in their occupancy, but afterwards, on inspection of the charters produced by them, he, as overlord, expelled Keir and caused the monks to be reinstated in their property. [Note mentions that the question was re-opened 30 years later by John Keir's son but the abbey won.]

Instrument wherby Oliver Sinclair of Rosline as superior grants possession and right to Malcolm Forrester of Torwood of two oxengates of the lands of Dunipace

1487 EProt 69

Instrument narrating that James Forster, son and procurator of Malcolm Forster of Torwood, passed to the gate of the castle of Rosling and sought the presence of Sir Oliver Sinclair of Rosling, knight, baron of the barony of Herbetschir, asking James Sclatter, gatekeeper of the said castle, if he could have admittance to the said Sir Oliver; the said gatekeeper replied that Sir Oliver was in the castle, but was then at his dinner (prandium), and therefore refused to give admittance; notwithstanding, the said James Forster waited for an hour near the castle, and because he could not have either entry or reply, he asked that the lands of Donypace, lying in the barony of Herbertschir and sheriffdom of Striveling, sometime recognosced in the hands of the said Sir Oliver, superior of the same, should be set in pledge to him as procurator for his said father; he offered to do for the said lands what he aught to do in law, and protested that the absence of the said Sir Oliver should not prejudice his father. That no purchaser of the estate will advance a penny in consideration of the house, the roof being quite rotten, and the walls extremely insufficient and likely to fall, and scarcely a window in the whole. Thinks it better to take down the slates and any part of the roof yet standing, and sell these with floors, joist and other material. 16 Janr 1754 Barons displeas'd with the factor for allowing the Lady Dunipace to take possession of the house after the forfeiture of the late Sir Archibald Primrose and order the house to be taken down, and the materials disposed of for the benefit of all concerned. 5 Feb 1754

DUNIPACE - HILLS OF DPC NS8381 [1] NS836818

- 1582 Buchanan, Ad laevam Carrontis duo terreni sunt tumuli hominis opera (ut res indicat) aedificati, vulgo Duni Pacis appellantur.
- 1819 Webster The Carrón after it leaves its source flows towards the SSE watering the Carron Bog in its progress leaving which it rushes over the Auchinlilly linn spout. From this it continues its course eastward giving motion to 3 paper mills above Denny and watering 2 large printfields below it winding through the bonny banks of Carron water long since famed in song. It passes near the hills of Dunipace and the site of the ancient Roman structure called Arthur's Oven.
- 1841 NSA Name.-This parish takes its name from two beautiful earthen-mounts called " the Hills of Dunipace," situated in a small but beautiful plain, traversed by the river Carron. They are about -sixty feet in height, and both together cover about two Scots acres. Buchanan says their name is derived from- Dun or Dunum, the Celtic word, signifying a hill or tower on a bill, and the Latin word pax, -peace. Other etymologists, say with much more probability, that the name is derived from two Celtic words, Duin-na-Bais, or Duna bas, (pronounced pas,) hills or tumuli of death. In writs issued by Edward I. of England, at Dunipace, 14th October 1301, it is written Donypas. Buchanan, and most historians after him, say that these hills are artificial. He adds, that they were raised to commemorate a peace concluded between Donald I. and the Roman Emperor Severus, in the early part of the third century. These opinions appear to be wholly untenable. Any lengthened discussion on this subject being inconsistent with this work, we merely mention, that, in the immediate neighbourhood, there are several similar though less remarkable earthen mounts. About two miles to the westward of these hills, there was a very beautiful one about forty feet in height, and covering nearly three roods of ground, said also to be artificial. this hill was mutilated, from time to time, for the purpose of repairing roads and other purposes. It was entirely removed about six years ago, to form an embankment on the turnpike road near Denny bridge. The strata of which this hill was composed, were carefully observed during its removal. These were so regular, and as if rising out of, and gradually returning again to similar strata in the circumjacent level ground, as to afford conclusive evidence that the hill was not the work of man. On the top of this hill, and about three feet below the surface, was found a coffin or tomb, composed of five large unwrought stones, in which were the bones of a human body, scull and teeth not much decayed. Along with these, was a vase of coarse unglazed earthenware, containing a small quantity of material resembling the lining of a wasp's nest, probably decayed paper or parchment, which in the lapse of ages had assumed that appearance. No conjecture could be formed about the individual here interred, tradition being entirely silent on the subject ; but this circumstance corroborates the opinion of some writers, that the hills of Dunipace might have been used as burying-places for ancient chiefs. For, previous to the erection of bridges in this district, the ford in the vicinity of these hills was the principal passage over the Carron, and would be the scene of many a bloody conflict between hostile armies. Hence the appropriateness of their name, "hills of death."*

1879 Gillespie	Three miles westward upon the north bank of the Carron, stand two beautiful mounds called the hills of Dunipace, which are taken notice of by most of our historians, as monuments of great antiquity. Their whole structure is of earth; but they are not both of the same form and dimensions. The more easterly one is perfectly round, resembling an oven, and about fifty feet in height. The other, at the foundation, is nearly of a triangular shape, but the superstructure is irregular; nor does the height of it bear any proportion to the extent of the base. Buchanan calls the western mound the smaller. His memory here, however, had quite failed him, for there are at least four times the quantity of earth in it than is in the other. These "hills" are unmistakably not artificial. But in times long past, they may have been put to some military use, as from their form and isolated position they are eminently fitted for fortification. Here and there for miles along the banks of the Carron are many steep gravel knolls, cut out by the action of its waters; and these Dunipace mounds have in all probability been similarly isolated, as here the short but impetuous river, whose upper course is a rapid descent, sweepingly strikes a plain.
1979 AS&M (FD) 116	Possible motte. Large steep sided mound about 100 m in diameter and 20 m high. The flat summit is about 20 m in diameter. The presence of a surrounding ditch is indicated in an 18c account.

DUNIPACE - PARISH OF

1621 RMS viii 124 parochia de Donypace

Diocese: St Andrews; Deanery: Linlithgow: In origin a chapel of Kirkton, Stirling, it passed with its mother church of Eaglais Ninian to Cambuskenneth by the grant of Robert, bishop of St Andrews 1140 x 58 (Camb. Reg., nos 25, 109). In 1163, however, Pope Alexander III confirmed the chapel of the castle of Dunipace to Dunfermline, and this led to a controversy between Dunfermline and Cambuskenneth, which ultimately resulted in a decision in favour of the latter, Dunipace continuing to be regarded as a chapel (Dunfermline Registrum, nos 215, 237, 239; Camb. Reg., no 118). Throughout the thirteenth century the church continued as a chapel of Kirkton, but had achieved parochial status before 1426/7. Both parsonage and vicarage tiends remained with Cambuskenneth, while the cure was possibly served by a curate (Ib., nos. 85, 87-8, 117)

Mr Peat, the tenant of Kirklands until the late 1980s, gave the information that Gunnershaw was part of Kirklands and located it around NS827833. He was 95 in 1986 and had been in Kirklands with his father from the age of 10. The location outlined in RS59/4 f.21v and RS59/5 f.361 confirms this and also indicates that, without doubt, this is the place that was later known as Salt pans [q.v.].

At about the same time (c1398) a question of possession arose as to four oxgates of land within and without the town of Dunipace, within the Earl's barony of Harbertshire in Stirlingshire, which were claimed by the abbey of Cambuskenneth and John Keir. At the instigation of the latter the Earl of Douglas for some time displaced the abbot and convent in their occupancy, but afterwards, on inspection of the charters produced by them, he, as overlord, expelled Keir and caused the monks to be reinstated in their property. [Note mentions that the question was re-opened 30 years later by John Keir's son but the abbey won.]

Hence I went to Halbertshire. This is, a strong high tower house built by the Laird of Roslin in King James the 5th time. The Lairds of Roslin have been great architects and patrons of building for these many generations. They are obliged to receive, the mason's word which is a secret signall masons have thro' out the world to know one another by. They alledge 'tis as old as since Babel, when they could not understand one another and they conversed by signs. Others would have it no older than Solomon. However it is, he that hath it will bring his brother mason to him without calling to him or your perceiving of the signe.'

St Alexander - a very obscure saint [the only information comes from an unreliable 17c source - info from RC Scottish Archivist]:

Alexander lived in the 12 - 13c and was related to a Scottish king [unspecified]. He had a sister, Matilda, and they went to France. She founded a hermitage and her feast day is April 11. Alexander is known from two dedications: a fair at Keith, Banfs., and the church at Dunipace. His feast day is August 6.

Note: It has been suggested that this name may have been related to the calico printing industry in the area. However, 1688 is over a century too early.

In the 1840s and 50s Alexander and Janet Kerr lived in the cottage called Saltpans ... on the Carron side there is a gully leading down to the stream [Carron] and in the gully is a group of trees about the site of Pundler's well from which the family drew water [information from local]. Alex at one time worked in the mill on the Carron and eventually came to manage it. He used it as a lint or linen mill and rented land from farmers to grow the flax he required. Once he bought a bush of hemlock trees. He and his sons cut the trees, stripped of the bark and sold it to the Pharmacist Bennet in Denny for the making of vitriol.

Salt pans is described as having a byre, stable and a large orchard to the rear. James Kerr, son of Alex, married Isobel Campbell who was in service in Dunipace House. They emigrated to Canada. [Kerr]

- 1578 Leslies History In Bishop Leslie's history of Scotland, written in 1578, I find a reference to a "Kinkairne" and as it is traditionally reported that the district at one time was entirely under forest, it is quite likely that our Kinkairne is referred to but whether it is meant, or the parish of Kincardine further west, the reference, which gives a very graphic description of the original wild cattle of Scotland may be excused and I make no apology for submitting it. Bishop Leslie says: -
"In this wood (Torwood) was nocht owlie kye, bot oxne and bules snawquhyte with a mane of a lyone. They mair over war sa cruel and wylde that from mankynde they abhored in sik a sorte that quhateuir thing the haundes of men had twechit or the air of their mouthes had blawn upon, or cudit as we speik, from al sik they abstained mony dayes thairefter. Farther this oyx or bull was sa bauld that nocht owly in his yre or quhen he was provoked walde he ouircum horsemen, but cuin feirit he nothing, naither tyred me commonlie all men to invade baith with hornes and feit, the the dogs quiles with us ar maist violent he regardet nocht, but walde clate (tear) him with his cluifes or kaithe him on his hornes. His flexhe was all girssillie, bot of a trimtaist.  1928 Love IV ii p.108 Although we have not found the name Baxter's Wynd before the year 1655, we think there can be no doubt the passage bore that title long prior to the year mentioned.

Another name long ago obsolete by which Baxter's Wynd was known was Westquarters Wynd. This we find as early as 1660, but there is no difficulty in accounting for it. From the close or wynd there must have been an entrance on the east side to the "Great Lodging," the town residence of the Livingstones of Westquarter, and to which a passing reference was made in our article on "Cistern Lane."

But Baxter's Wynd bore yet another name. which we have heard old residents frequently employ, viz., Post Office Close. In the early years of last century-and we have some grounds for thinking long prior to that time the postal affairs of our town- not then very heavy - were conducted in the western part of the Great Lodging, which explains the name "Post Office Close."

1908 Love i p.142	Blue Bell Close - For sixty odd years, at least, this thoroughfare has held its present name, lending as it does to the inn known as the Blue Bell. Immediately prior to that time it was known as "McKechnie's Close" the property in the court having been purchased in 1824 by Robert McKechnie, writer, afterwards Town Clerk of Falkirk. ... But this close, as Mr John Lithgow informes us some years ago, bore a more ancient name than that of McKechnies" or "Blue Bell". It was known as "The Kiln Alley" from the circumstances, no doubt, that it led up to some malt kilns. ... Most of our readers know the traditional story that in the close named by the Town Council in June 1907 as Galloway's Close - leading from the Blue bell Court to "Robert's Wynd" a countryman was "beetled" to daeth on a feeing fair evening. From this circumstance the close was known as "The Beetler's Howff". On a quiet evening a peculiar sound could be heard coming from the close ... the ghost of the murdered man. Groups used to gather ... caused by water running through a pipe

BROCKVILLE	FAK NS8880 [1] NS885803
1831 Love ii p.220	The first to break ground for building purposes in Hope Street was Mrs Isabella Risk or Sworde, relict of Andrew Sworde, farmer and brewer, Munglehead. In 1831 Mrs Sworde seised “in the pro indivisio” half of 2 acres of land on the north side of Falkirk in that part called the Weitlands with the headrigs thereto”. There she built Brockville and was resident there in 1832 and for years afterwards. The titles to Brockville give no clues as to why the house was so named, but we think the reason will be evident when we state that in 1791 Mrs Sworde, whose maiden name, as we have seen, was Isabella Risk, married on the 11 th of February of that year James Brock of Falkirk parish, she being resident in Muiravonside. James Brock was probably of the family of that name who for nearly a century were proprietors or tenants of the Old Crown Hotel, Falkirk ... second marriage to Andrew Sworde of Munglehead in 1819. The railway cut Brockville in two; the part on the north side of the railway still being known as Brockville Park

Eva, the daughter of Alwin, the second Earl of Lennox obtained from her brother, Earl Maldouven, the barony of Kilsyth, which then formed a part of the earldom of Lennox. She married Malcolm, son of Duncan, Thane of Callendar, in the shire of Stirling. To her and Malcolm, the son of Duncan, her brother Maldouen granted a charter, dated the day of St Laurence [10th August] 1217, of Glaskell, Brengoene, and a ploughgate and a half of Kelnasydhe with the patronage of the church of Moniabrocd. This charter was confirmed by K. Alex. III in 1251. By another charter without date, E. Maldouen granted to the said Malcolm the whole of Glaskhel and other lands in free marriage with his sister Eva. By Malcolm, Eva had a son Alwin, Thane of Callendar ...

1226 RRS i p.40

In the reign of Alexander II we have a record of the thanes of Callendar: P., thane of Callendar, witnessed an act of the Earl of Lennox in 1226, and in 1234 the king made over to Holyrood Abbey at ferm all his lands of Callendar which he had retained in demesne when he granted 40 librates there to Malcolm [Duncan's son], formerly thane of Callendar. This Malcolm was presumably predecessor, if not direct ancestor, of Alwyn of Callendar occurring in Cambuskenneth Abbey records c1260, and of John and Alwyn of Callendar who held the estate for one knight's service towards the end of the 13 c. We may reasonably infer that Callendar was held by thanes long before Malcolm, its last official thane was bought out by Alexander II. Callendar looks very much like a Northumbrian shire and there seems no reason to regard its thane as a different type from the thane of

- Haddington.

Note 1: "The tower house was apparently built to replace an earlier castle by Henry Livingstone of Myddilbyning, West Lothian, shortly before the year 1485. The property was held by the Livingstones of Dunipace in the 16th century and in the first half of the 17th century. By the end of the 17th century it was in the possession of the Baillie family from whom it passed to the Dundases by the marriage of Thomas Dundas of Fingask to Bethia, daughter of John Baillie of Castlecary in 1730. The Marquess of Zetland, who possesses the property today, is a descendant of this marriage." [Stirlingshire]

Alexander Levingstoun of Donypace, and Elizabeth Hepburns his spouse, - of the lands of Seybeggis, with the mill, and the advocacy of the chapel of St Helene, in the barony of Stratoun by annexation ... and sasine given at the Mot of Seybeggis called the Turchill
PSAS Proceedings , Volume 68 (1933-34). 'Turchill' is the form in which the alternative name appears in the Registrum Magni Sigilli . But the Rev. Mr Miller, who has examined the original, informs me that the true reading is 'Curthill,' i.e. Court-hill, implying that, after it had served its primary purpose, the mound had been put to another use. For examples of confusion between c and t, see Proceedings , vol. xxxix. (1904-5), p. 380.
See Stirlingshire i p 173, No. 180
Note: the giving of sasine here indicates that the mottehill was still regarded as the "caput" of the barony at that time.

1845 Stuart	Elf hill a singular conical height which rises crowned with trees about half a mile of Rough Castle
1726 Gordon p.57	It was between this point and Dick's House that according to vulgar report Robert Graham nephew of Eugenius King of Scots broke through the Wall and had in consequence the honour of bestowing his name upon the Roman works (Credat Judaus) from Carriden to the Clyde. Elf hill is traditionally regarded as the favourite haunt of fairies

FALKIRK - PARISH

diocese: St Andrews; deanery: Linlithgow

Known formerly as Eglesbrich and later as Varia Capella, the church was confirmed to Holyrood in 1164, the donor apparently being Richard, bishop of St Andrews, who confirmed the grant in 1166. [Holyrood Liber, App. i No. 1, App. ii No. 4]. A vicarage settlement took place in 1251, but the vicarage in turn was annexed to the abbey by Pope Benedict XIII [1394x1419], the cure thereafter being served by a canon from Holyrood, who in this manner retained both parsonage and vicarage revenues [Ib., No.75; GRH Chrs., No 282; RS 435, 184v; CPL x 711; Assumptions 104v, 106v]. The abbey's possession of the vicarage was constantly assailed by seculars and in 1449/50 an attempt was made to erect a collegiate church on its revenues, but this proved to be unsuccessful [CSSR ii 88 and n; RS 434, 297, 442, 228v]

1908 Love i p.41 The mansion of Forganhall was converted into apartments some years ago ... The large garden, famous for its fruit trees, is now utilised for clothes drying ... So far as we know, no drawing of the original building is in existance. ... What is now named Forganhall was originally part of the lands of Dalderse. In 1783 we find Mr William Glen of West Plean seised Oct. 6th in part of Dalderse. In Nov. 1784, we find him described as William Glen, late of West Plean, now of Forganhall, and we take it that he either built the house in that year or purchased it, and gave it the name it still bears. The Rev. John Glen M.A., uncle of Mr William Glen of Forganhall was for 52 years minister of Forgandenny, Perthshire, and out of these circumstances arose the name.

SS Forganhall was registered at Grangemouth. She is recorded as carrying immigrants to Victoria, Australia on two occasions, arriving October 1858 and May 1859.

1928 Love IV ii p.132	On the 20 th January of that year (1823) it was reported to a committee meeting of that body by the then convener, Robert Horn, that there was at present for sale a property belonging to the creditors of the Falkirk Union Bank (see "Bank Street"), situated on the south side of the High Street, which he and others who had examined it considered particularly well adapted for the site of public markets for the town, which, he added, were much wanted. This property, then called " Glens Land ," on part of. which appears, to 'be created the present Clydesdale Bank, extended to the Bean Row, entrance to which was through what is, known as King's Arms Court. Mr Horn took it upon himself to secure a plan from Henry

Taylor, builder and this he showed to the committee all of whom thought it highly suitable for the purpose intended. It was agreed to mention the matter to the Stintmasters and ask if they had any suggestions to offer on the matter of a marketplace, and what they thought of the suitability or otherwise of the site of "Glen's Land."

1928 Love	“The Great Lodging.” associations with Prince Charles and the Duke Of Cumberland.

A brief reference has already been made to the building in which Prince Charles slept on the night after the battle of Falkirk, and at a later date, to his cousin, the Duke of Cumberland. It was known as "The Great Lodging," and was removed by its proprietor, Mr H. B. Watson, bookmaker, in 1899-1900 to make room for more up to date business premises.

The building was probably erected late in the sixteenth century, and belonged to the family of Livingstone of Westquarter. It presumably would take the place of one less pretentious. At an early part of the eighteenth century that family's affairs became embarrassed and the "Great Lodging," with others, was put for sale in 1721, and a purchaser found in the person of Walter Graham, "Chirurgion," who had been in practice in Falkirk for at least a decade prior to that, and had his residence probably in the "Great Lodging" Towards the close of 1701 he married Henrietta Livingstone, daughter of the Laird of Bedlormie and by her had a numerous family. Our interest present lies in their son Walter, who followed his father's profession, but who, in a rash moment, followed the standard of Prince Charles. We will meet with him later among, the list of local residents who were as ill-guided as himself to follow the Prince. Dr Graham, senior, died in 17371 and Mrs Graham in 1761. She had been described As "a lady whose intelligence and superior manners were long remembered with veneration, and it has been asserted she had Jacobite leanings.

HOSPITAL OF FALKIRK	# FAK NS8880 [1] NS886800
1720 GD1/170 iii 1723 Macfarlane f.399	shows that £10.15.3½ was paid annually by Callendar Estate to "the Hospital " It [Falkirk] has an hospital near the west end of the town erected by Earl James about the years 1666 or 67, where the poor are conveniently served with necessaries for life.
1797 OSA vol 19	There is also in the town of Falkirk an hospital for the support of four aged and infirm persons. It was founded and endowed in 1640 by Lord Livingston of Almond and Callendar. This deed was amplified and confirmed by him in the year 1668, after he was created Earl of Callendar. Upon certain parts of the estates which then belonged to his Lordship, there is security given for the fulfilment of the obligation. Moreover, if his Lordship, or any of the successors to his estates should neglect or refuse to fill up any vacancy in this hospital, it is provided by the foresaid act, that, if this neglect or refusal be persisted in after notice shall have been given, in due form to the person or persons then possessing the Callendar estates, then the minister of Falkirk for the time being is authorised to present a proper object of this charity to fill any vacancy which shall be in the circumstances now described. Mr Richard Callander, then minister of Falkirk, and his successors in that office, were, in the above specified deed, made, constituted and appointed patrons of this hospital, and were lawfully authorised to nominate and admit proper poor persons to the benefit thereof in all cases where the said Earl or his successors should refuse or illegally delay to do their duty.

1836 Falkirk Almanack

There is in the town an hospital, founded by Lord Livingstone of Almond and Callander, 1640, for the support of aged and infirm women. William Forbes, Esq., M.P., is patron.

1928 Love IV ii p.132

It may be conjectured that for a long period there existed a narrow pathway across the Glebe – and on the south side – from Vicars Loan or Street to the west end of the town. There was such a passage in 1738. It is not, however, until the passing of “An Act for Repairing the Highways and Bridges in the County of Stirling” in 1784 that we glean our definite information regarding the thoroughfare we now know as Newmarket Street. --- In 1815 the road was widened opposite the Hospital which was enclosed by a wall running west to the property of Messrs Aitken, brewers. This wall was removed in 1904, when the posting establishment of the late William Scott - now carried on by Mrs Scott - was erected on the Hospital Garden site.

1928 Love III p.71

With a view to having more up-to-date premises, Mrs Malcolm with commendable enterprise, built the present Crown Hotel in 1879, which, as stated at the outset of this article, has just been closed. The architect was our late townsman, Mr Thomas B. M’Fadzean, and the building removed to make room for the new Crown Hotel was the Falkirk Hospital.

JENNY MAIRS BURN FAK NS8879 [1] NS884798

1908 Love i p.15

A correspondant writes:- It is just bordering on two thirds of a century since Jenny Mair died ... She was an old woman of no historical account, but the picture of cleanliness who sat at her spinning-wheel, with a plain old-fashioned white mutch on her head; and her house, which stood at the corner of the main road and the burn, with the window on the gable, looking towards where the the new church [Erskine] now stands, was a favourite with many good people. The burn, with its road alongside ... a favourite walk ... constituted 'up by the back o' Jenny Mair's ...

Our own researches go to show that she was the daughter of Michael Muir (not Mair), a very well known citizen of Falkirk more than a century ago, and Janet Livingston, his wife. Jenny was born in 1780. Her father carried on an extensive business as a joiner, and fulfilled several important contracts in the eastern district of Stirlingshire.

KERSE HILL	# FAK NS8980 [1]
1817 Grassom 1912 CDS13 1924 Love IV ii 97	Kerse Hill Kerse Hill - Major A.M. Kinnaird The lands then purchased lay on both sides of the Forth and Clyde Canal, the portion on the south side and on part of which Kersehill is erected consisted of three acres two roods and six falls arable land, and that on the north side of that waterway extending to thirty-three falls and four ells, also of arable land. It must have been shortly after the year 1782 that Kersehill was erected by Alexander Ramsay, merchant, and later cashier of the Falkirk Banking Co., as in that year the residence of that family named Mungall, was sold to the Hon Captain Charles Napier and afterwards changed by him to Merchiston Hall. An account of the- family of Ramsay of Mungall, which was a prominent one in Palkirk and district from the closing years of the 17th century till well nigh the middle of the last, will be given in the notice of Merchiston Hall. The name Kersehill arose, we think, from the circumstance that it stands on the rising ground above the rich vale of the Carse or Kerse of Falkirk. In recording a marriage of one of Alexander Ramsay's daughters in 1814, the ceremony is said to, have taken place at "Carsehill," and forty years later in another public announcement it is named "Karsehill," but. these spellngs have long since ceased, although in the opinion of many they furnish us with the correct pronouciation of the name.

MAIDEN CASTLE # FAK NS8679 [1] NS862798

1697 PSAS xxxv p.331 The author heard of Roman coins having been found, but the people would not admit they had any; also of the finding of anchors and sea tackle; and he notices the paved way, half a mile long, leading to the Antonine Vallum, " at the end of which stood a great castle, called by the country folks the Maiden Castle, but now little is to be seen of it."

1697 PSAS xxxv p.331 The Roman Way passing through the station is mentioned first in 1697. Where it pierces the Antonine Vallum, it was uncovered in 1894 when Mr Fairlie's villa was built on a prominent mound on the Vallum on the west side of the entrance, which seems to have been the demilune, marked by Hoy, and which was cut down 6 feet to accommodate Mr Fairlie's villa. It was seen by Mr Buchanan, and found to have been well paved and covered with 'channel'. Maiden, perhaps more safely written Maden Castle.—This ' great castle,' described by the anonymous writer of 1697 as being at the Vallum end of the Roman Way, I had supposed was possibly represented on Roy's map, 500 yards north-east of the entrance, by an unnamed oval mound, measuring 1000 by 500 feet on the top 1697 PSAS xxxv p.337 A new Castellum.—When a piece of ground south of, close to, and right in rear of the passage through the Vallum was being trenched in 1894-95, to make a garden to Mr Fairlie's villa, Mr Buchanan observed that the whole area consisted of a mass of tumbled stones, with scattered heaps of broken brown and grayish or whitish pottery. The east side was bounded by a stone bottoming, exactly like the paving under the Vallum, which ran direct south from the Vallum for about 100 feet, and then westward, where it was soon broken up ; but there could hardly be a doubt that it ended on the west, as it began on the east, forming a rectangle, of which the Vallum was the north side, and that Mr Buchanan has added another Wall-Fort, or Castellum, to those already known. It seems improbable that this was " Maden Castle," as it is on the south side of the wall.

1977 AFS A motte, known locally as "Maiden Castle", is said to have stood on the N side of the Antonine Wall ditch at this point. this earth-built mound, apparently measuring about 22 m from W to E by 12 m transversely, is reported to have been reduced in height by approximately 2 m when Watling Lodge house was built in 1894.

1879 Gillespie p.19	Of Marion's Well there is scant record. According to tradition, it got its name from Marion Livingston - a nun of the house of Callendar, who in the performance of the saceradotal vow which kept her from the world, visited the well at intervals, and used its soft waters as a pediluvium. The original well which was built round with stone, stood at the bottom of the Cladden's Brae, on the bank of the East Burn. It was further protected by a circle of upright slabs - the great resting place of the water maids.

1805 AOS 4998	John Corbet of Mountvaccine M.D., Falkirk
1908 Love i p.74	Mount Vaccine

The ground on which the Town Hall is erected was known as "Millhall's Yard", and the close leading into the Market Inn from the extreme south entrance to the Lint Riggs, prior to the late improvements, was known as "Millhall Close", that ground and property being at one time possessed by Norman Livingston of Millhall, who had his town "Lodging" here. In the original rights it was described thus:- All and haill James Livingston's two fifteenth parts of the Town and Lands of Falkirk".

In 1801 the ground and house became the property of Dr John Corbet, the yard becoming known as "Dr Corbet's Garden", and the close as "Dr Corbet's Close".

Dr John Corbet ... He bore a conspicuous part in promoting the vaccine innoculation, the practice of which he greatly contributed by strenuously exerting himself to establish it in Falkirk and neighbourhood soon after Jenner's discovery was communicated to the public. His house became known as Mount Vaccine.

On being vacated by the Corbet family, Mount Vaccine was utilised as a young ladies school from the close of 1828 ... purchased by Lauchlan Aitken, brewer, Falkirk, John Crawford, farmer, Howkerse and James Wyse, builder, Falkirk, in 1833 “for themselves on account of the other partners of the New Market Company of Falkirk”. Probably about that year it became a licensed house, taking the name “New Market Inn”, which it held until its demolition in 1905.

Place-Names of Ross & Cromarty:

“A pool in the River Carron ABD is: Pollmoral. Watson cites Macdonald (Place-Names of West Aberdeenshire) who collected comparable names: Balmoral, Polmorral on Dee near Banchory, Morall in Stratherne, Drummorrell in Wigtown, Morall and Lynn of Morall in the lordship of Urquart, Morall mòr and Morall beag on Findhorn. --- These examples may not all be of the same origin (Morel at Tomatin, for instance, is in Gaelic Mòirl), but the second part of Poll-mòral above can hardly be other than mòral majestic, noble. The pool in question is one of the largest on the river.”

Note: The terminal “s” is undoubtedly a plural given “Upper” and “Nether”, and the use of “Mumrill Mill”

1928 Love IV ii p.132 It may be conjectured that for a long period there existed a narrow pathway across the Gelebe – and on the south side – from Vicars Loan or Street to the west end of the town. There was such a passage in 1738. It is not, however, until the passing of “An Act for Repairing the Highways and Bridges in the County of Stirling” in 1784 that we glean our definate information regarding the thoroughfare we now know as Newmarket Street. At a meeting of the Road Trustees, held in the house of James Wyse, vintner, Falkirk, on 28th June, 1785, the opinion was expressed that it would be advantageous to the public if “the back road leading from the Manse to the west end of the town at John Brock’s house (the old Crown Inn, where now stands the Royal Bank) were repaired made more commodious for carriages.” A lack of funds made the trustees hesitate, but inquiries being made at the then minister of the parish, the Rev. John Atchison-himself a keen road reformer - as to the sum he would require to give off the necessary ground, he named five pounds. The Trustees immediately closed with the minister’s offer, and instructed one of their number, Mr Walter Ferrier of Summerford, to carry out the, widening of the thoroughfare, and for a few pounds annually there- after it was kept in repair. What quantity of ground was granted by the minister is not stated. In 1815 the road was widened opposite the Hospital which was enclosed by a wall running west to the property of Messrs Aitken, brewers. This wall was removed in 1904, when the posting establishment of the late William Scott - now carried on by Mrs Scott - was erected on the Hospital Garden site.

“A curious illustration of two different terms lying side by side, which are derived from the same word undergoing different changes, will be found in Forfarshire, where the term Llan for a church appears, as in Lantrethin. It is a phonetic law between Latin and Celtic, that words beginning in the former with pl are in the latter ll. The word Planum, in Latin signifying any cultivated spot, in contradistinction from a desert spot, and which, according to Ducange, came to signify Cimiterium, becomes in Celtic Llan, the old meaning of which was a fertile spot, as well as a church. In the inquisition, in the reign of David I., into the possessions of the See of Glasgow, we find the word in its oldest form in the name Planmichael, now Carmichael; and as we find Ballin corrupted into Ban, and Ballindoch becomes Bandoch, so Plan becomes corrupted into Pan, and we find it in this form likewise in Forfarshire, Panmure and Panbride. In the Lothians and the Merse this word has become Long, as in Longnewton and Longniddrie.” (Skene's Four Ancient Books of Wales Chapter ix. The Celtic topography of Scotland, and the dialectic differences indicated by it.)
