Although this place, strictly speaking, lay outwith the town, being on the west side of the West Burn, it really should be considered as an urban name. The soapree lay alongside one of the town's tanneries and the soap was, presumably, a by-product of the tanning industry (lanolin?). The suffix -ree is the same as that found, for instance, in coal-ree.

1860 OS Swords Wynd

Love i p.43 One of the oldest family names to be found in ancient documents relating to Falkirk is that of “Sworde”. Others show the Swordes to have been possessed of considerable property in town and district and one of them to have held honourable positions. James Sworde was Procurator-Fiscal of the Regality of Falkirk in 1641, and was holding the office in 1648; John Sworde, Baillie of the Regality court, was sworn and admitted an elder of the Parish Church in 1669; he died December 1696; his wife's name was Christian Dun ... The Wynd or "closs" lying on the south side of the High Street and running in the same direction to the Howgate, or what was anciently known as the "Burnegait" had the Swordes as residents there in 1654, as we find from a Sasine or feu charter by David Livingstoune of Pantaskine, with consent of Helen Elphingstoune his spouse, to Robert Levingstoune, portioner of Falkirk and Elizabeth Wyse, his spouse. Two hundred years ago it was known as "Baillie Sword's Close" and was so named, no doubt, as being the residence of the Baillie whom we have just mentioned. In 1698, Humphrey Sword, portioner of Falkirk, disposed of the property in Sword's Close or Wynd to Thomas Muirhead of West Boreland and it became known as West Boreland Close, but the name did not come to stay. Love i p.44 It is right to state that in a "Plan of Falkirk" issued in 1832 by the late Mr Alexander Black "Sword's Wynd" was designated by mistake as "Bantaskines Wynd".

The house stands within its own grounds and lies almost due west from Forganhall and is also erected on the lands of Dalderse. The first mansion-house of Thornhill of which there seems any record was very different from the present one, which was erected in its stead in 1851-52 by the late Mr

Alexander Macfarlane. The present house stands about thirty yards from the site of the old, which stood near the north-west corner of the garden wall. It was a house of no pretensions. devoid of all ornamentation, and bore no date. The first occupant of whom we have any knowledge is William Greig who seems to have become proprietor in 1782

THREE BRIDGES	FAK NS8580 [1]	NS856808

This was a local landmark created by three adjacent railway bridges crossing the Falkirk-Bonnybridge road. The central one carried the main railway line from Galsgow to Perth, the easternmost carried the branch line to Grahamston and Polmont, while the remaining one bore the branch line to Denny. All three lines converged at Carmuir's West Junction. While the last of these has been demolished for several years now but the name persists and is now used to name a roundabout in the area.

BOTHKENNER CHURCH NS903835

Bothkennar

- 1795 AOS 2887 The Heritors of the Parish of Bothkennar, seised Dec. 30. 1794,- in parts of Bothkennar, whereon they have built a new church called the Church of Bothkennar, and Session House, parish of Bothkennar;- on disp. by Thomas Dundas of Fingask
- 1797 RHP242 Bothkennar Church
- 1865 OSNB Bothkennar Church - The parish church was built in 1789, the minister's stipend is about £201.12.10 with a glebe worth £12 per annum. Number of sittings about 300, it is in good repair but has no pretensions whatever to architectural elegance.

BOTHKENNER - PARISH

Diocese: St Andrews

Deanery: Linlithgow

Both parsonage and vicarage fruits pertained to the nunnery of Eccles at the Reformation period. It is possible this church was granted or confirmed to the nuns by Bishop David of St Andrews in 1250x65, when it appears as the church of Bucham (Reports of the Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts, 12th Rep., App.Pt. viii. nos. 132, 146; St Andrews Lib., xxix - Great Register of St Andrews, No. 60)

[ex Parishes of Medieval Scotland, Ian B Cowan, Scot. Hist. soc., 1967]

In 1900 the parish of Grangemouth was formed from part of the parish of Polmont, part of the parish of Falkirk, and part of the parish of Bothkennar. The remainder of Bothkennar was transferred to Falkirk and thus the parish of Bothkennar was suppressed.

- 1584 RH15/19/99 Signet letters of arrestment at instance of James Home, commendator of abbay of Eccles, of teind sheaves of parish of Bothkennar, in sheriffdom of Stirling, pertaining to said commendator 11 May 1584
- 1605 GD65/28 Tack by James, prior of the abbey of Eccles [Eccles], and the convent thereof, in favour of Alexander Hamilton of Innerweik [Innerwick] and James Hamilton, his eldest son, for their lifetimes, and after their decease for 2 lifetimes and 19 years, of the teinds, parsonage and vicarage, of the kirk and parish of Bothkennar, for yearly payment of £120 Scots. [Signature; seal appended]. 25/4/1605
- 1643 TE5/446 Papers Relating to Teinds and Teind Administration, Stirlingshire: Bothkennar 1643
- 1865 OSNB The Parish of Bothkennar is in the County of Stirling, Prebytery of Stirling, Synod of Perth and Stirling.
The word Bothkennar is of Celtic origin, and signifies the small arable fen or marsh - a name highly descriptive of the situation of the parish, which is very small, all arable, and appears at first to have been marshy, from having been made up from the alluvial deposits of the Firth of Forth.
A new church was built in 1789 and it is more than sufficient for the accommodation of the parish. A new manse was built in 1816, at an expense of £1575, and is, to the honour of the Heritors, the best in the County. The stipend is 17 chalders of victual and the teinds are exhausted. The glebe consists of 10 Scotch acres of the best land. There is no village in the parish except a small portion of Carronshore. Falkirk is the nearest market town. The roads are, in general, kept in good repair by the statute labour; and there is easy access to every part of the county.

1865 OSNB Kerse Bridge - A large stone bridge consisting of five arches which crosses the Carron Water about 1½ miles from its confluence with the River Forth. In the centre of which there is a wooden draw bridge for the purpose of letting vessels pass. There is also a half penny levied on all persons crossing, for the purpose of defrayment of the annual expense connected with the draw bridge. It is a County bridge.

1879-1883 RHP44479 Sections of road from near Bellsdyke to Kerse Bridge, showing subsidence caused by underground excavations, and of surface along Orchardhead march.

Note: The present bridge on this site was built to improve access to Kincardine Bridge. This was preceded by the "Newbridge" which was a toll bridge, hence the local and informal name of "Pay Brig".

1843 Scotsmag	Miller certainly had enough wealth to retire and this was shown in his property. In 1843 he had bought land at Polmont and built a substantial mansion there called Millfield , now demolished. He had no doubt become aware of the area when he was building the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway. It is interesting that Polmont station was built adjoining the estate which would have made it easy for Miller to commute to his office in Edinburgh. [From Scots Magazine, September 2002]

1796 OSA p.245 Accordingly in the year 1599 (Mr William Livingston) received inauguration (as minister of the parish of Monaburgh). At this time he was a considerable heritor in the parish; being proprietor of the lands of Monaburgh. The boundaries of that estate are not well known, but it is certain that the grounds upon which the village stands were a part of them. For Sir William Livingston of Kilsyith, one of the Lords of Session, purchased them from the parson for the express purpose of extending the village, which stood at that time on the banks of the Ebroch. Those new feus were granted along the Garrel Burn, which meets the

- Ebroch nearly opposite the centre of the village; and of course the new town was called Burnside.
- 1796 OSA p.246 About this period (1665) the village was considerably increased. A new town was built, not along the banks of the Ebroch or Garrel Burn as formerly, but on a rising ground about 200 yards south of those streams, which at that time was called the Moat Hill, as the Lord of the manor had been accustomed to hold courts of justice in that place. This new town of course was called by the title of of the proprietor, Kilsyth. And from that period the whole village obtained that name.

MOAT HILL	# KSY NS7178 [1]
1796 OSA p.246	About this period (1665) the village was considerably increased. A new town was built, not along the banks of the Ebroch or Garrel Burn as formerly, but on a rising ground about 200 yards south of those streams, which at that time was called the Moat Hill , as the Lord of the manor had been accustomed to hold courts of justice in that place. This new town of course was called by the title of of the proprietor, Kilsyth. And from that period the whole village obtained that name.

ARTHUR'S O'ON # LRB NS8782 NS879827

c796 Nennius Carutius postea imperator reedificavit et VII castellis munivit inter utraque ostia: domumque rotundam politis lapidibus super ripam fluminis Carun, quod a suo nomine nomen accepit, fornicem triumphalem in victoriae memoriam erigens construxit

[Carutius when he became emperor rebuilt seven castles between two estuaries: a round house of dressed stone on the bank of the river Carun, which is named from him, which was a triumphal vault raised and constructed in his memory]

Nennius 23. Severus was the third emperor who passed the sea to Britain, where, to protect the provinces recovered from barbaric incursions, he ordered a wall and a rampart to be made between the Britons, the Scots, and the Picts, extending across the island from sea to sea, in length one hundred and thirty-three miles: and it is called in the British language Gwal. Moreover, he ordered it to be made between the Britons, and the Picts and Scots; for the Scots from the west, and the Picts from the north, unanimously made war against the Britons; but were at peace among themselves. Not long after Severus died in Britain. One MS. here adds, "The above-mentioned Severus constructed it of rude workmanship in length 132 miles; i.e. from Penguaul, which village is called in Scottish Cenail, in English Peneltun, to the mouth of the river Cluth and Cairpentaloch, where this wall terminates; but it was of no avail. The emperor Carausius afterwards rebuilt it, and fortified it with seven castles between the two mouths: he built also a round house of polished stones on the banks of the river Carun [Carron]: he likewise erected a triumphal arch, on which he inscribed his own name in memory of his victory.

Dumville: The Eastern Terminus Of The Antonine Wall p.295

presented as a gloss on the statement of distance found in the text of Historia Brittonum:

Per.cxxxii. miliaria passuum, idest, a Penguaul-que villa scottice Cenail, anglice vero Peneltun, dicitur usque ad ostium fluminis Cluth et Cair Pentaloch, quo murus ille finitur, rustico opere Severus ille predictus construxit; sed nichil profuit (Dumville 1977, 22-4; Dumville 1985-, VII; note that the text should probably read 'usque ad Cair Pentaloch et ad ostium fluminis Clut').

A further addition, immediately following, tells us that another Emperor, unhelpfully named Carucius/Carutius (Karitius in some other versions), renewed the wall; this Emperor is then credited (in an addition which, on the evidence of the capitula, was at one time intended to go into the following chapter) with the building of a triumphal monument by the River Carron;

Carutius postea imperator reedificavit, et. vii. castellis munivit inter utraque ostia; domumque rotundam politis lapidibus super ripam fluminis Carun, quod a suo nomine nomen accepit, fornix triumphalem in victoriae memoriam erigens, construxit.

et vtilitate molendini fui del Stanhus quot iuxta furnu- [m?] Arthuri infra baroniam de Dunypas ...

[and the use of the mill which was of Stanhus and which lies nearby Arthur's O'on within the barony of Dunypas]

1531 Boece i.82

This history of the cuming of Cesar and his army in Britan and subdewing of it to his empire, nocht far discordant fra the wourdis of Cesar in his Commentaris, ar drawin oute of Verimond, Campbell and vtheris autouris. Nochttheless, it is said in oure wlgare cornikillis that Iuius come to the Callendar Wode, and kest doun Camelon, the principale ciete of Pichtis, eftir that the samyn was randrit to him; syne left behynd him, nocht far fra Carroun, ane round hous of square stanis, xx elns of hycht & xij elns of breid, in perpetuall memory of his cuming to that place. Vtheris sayis he vsit that hous as his tent in al hs wayage, having tursit with him, and was callit Iulius Hoyff. Nochttheless, becaus na hstoricianis rehercis the weris maid be Iulius aganis the Scottis and Pichtis, we latt yae pas, and will inseyr na thing in this oure werk, bot sa mekill as we maye preif be famous and attentik autouris. As to this hous, it was rownd, as we may se zite, havand na wyndois bot abone, in maner of the anciant tempilis quhilkis ar zite sene in Rome, with benkis of stayn gangand rowynd abowte within. The flure of it has bene of squair stanis, and the herne [eagle], quhilk is the Romane ansenze [emblem] ingravit in the samyn; bot now be rowist of zeris is worn awaye. In it was ane huge stayn, standand to the sowth; on the quhilkis the Gentilis maid thair sacrifice. Thairfor vtheris famous autouris writis this tempil was biggit be Wespian, in honour of Claudius the empriour and of Victory; and was bett doun be Edward Langschankis quhen he ouraid mekle of Scotland, as we sall eftir schaw.

1531 Boece i.103

The nixt summyr, Vespasiane rasis his army fra the wynter schelis to cum on the Scottis and Pichtis, and come sone eftir within the boundis of Mers and Berwyk, quhilkis wer vnder dominoun of Pichtis, quhais inhabitantis wes ay maist keyn and strangest inmeis to Britonis. Howbeit, yai wer than sa brokin with the batell afoir rehersit that yai wer randerit, with mony vyeris thair nychtbouris, to Romans. Vtheris, quhilk wer mair nobill, fled to Cameloun, belevand the Romanis suld nocht cum thair for difficill and strait passage. But quhen Vespasiane wes aduerteist thairof, he beltit the toun with ane strang sege, and tuke it finalye. Amang mony vther riche and precious iowellis gottin in the said toun wer fundin the armys of the Kingis of Pichtis, quhilkis wer ane croun of gold sett aboute with precious stanis of vareant colouris. Thair was fundin ane swerde with heft of gold, maist curiously wrocht, with ane purple scheith, quilk was worn mony zeris eftir be Vespasiane in his weers. The Pichtis quhilkis wer taken in the toun wer licent to return hayme on thair plegis. Vespasiane, resident ane certane tyme eftir in Camelon, brocht diuers ald capitans to inhabit the samyn, to leif vnder Romane lawis, and to instruk the rude pepill in civi maneris. Eftir that he biggit ane tempill nocht far fra the said toun, upoun the Watter of Carroun, in honour of Claudius and Victory, commanding the samyn to be adorit be the pepill.

1531 Boece i.107

Plancius, the gouvounour of Roman army fell in irremedial infirmite of fluxe --- Plancius decessit, quhais body wer brynt, eftir the Roman consuetude, and consecrait in the tempill of Claudius and Victory

1531 Boece i.121

The samyn tyme apperit mony vncouthtis & merwillis in Albion. The seyis apperit rede and bludy, with mony dede bodijs cassin to the brayis, and furius wemen decllarit terribill thingis to cum. The ymage of Claudius besyde Camelon fell doun in dross, and the ymage of Victory fell doun fra the altere on hir bak, as sho had been vincust.

1880 Nimmo [3] i p 46 Arthur's O'on – Henry Sinclair, Dean of Glasgow about 1560, calls it “Arthur's Huif”, and Gordon speaks of it as “Julius' Hoff.” Its site was a few yards to the north east of the Forge Row, Carron

CASTLEHILL	MAS NS9778 [1]	NS973782
1860 OSNB	Castlehill - A small elliptical hill, one of a series of fortified eminences said to have formerly existed in this locality. On the summit of this hill are three very plainly marked platforms with steep slopes forming a semi ellipses, and evidently arteficial but there are no existing remains to indicate that a Castle or any other building has stood here. Stone Coffins, in the Statistical Account of the Parish, are said to have been found here, but no information can be obtained to confirm this statement, and from the present appearance of the hill it is very doubtful if any excavation sufficiently deep for the discovery has been made on it since the fortifications were constructed.

Note: This place came to be part of the estate of Muiravonside as a consequence of a change taking place in the course of the River Avon. Formally it had belonged to the lands of Carriber in West Lothian. Legally it became part of the superiority of Muiravonside by an excambion in the early eighteenth century between Dalziel of Neuk and Hay of Carriber. Nevertheless, it had been held as a feu by Muiravonside prior to this. Inchgarvy was exchanged for a piece of land called 'Whinnie grain' which pertained to the superiority of Muiravonside.

1755 Roy 1817 Grassom 1879 RAF p.283-284	Imanil Abby Manuel Abbey For the old Priory we must proceed up the Avon to the vicinity of Manuel village. The ruins, consisting simply of a portion of the western gable wrapt in a thick wood-warp of ivy, stand on the north bank of the river, in a haugh on the farm occupied by Mr Inglis. The fragment, which is of hewn-stone, and elegant in its simplicity, contains an arched-door, or gateway, with throe small Gothic windows over it; and above these a circular one is placed. In 1730, however, the "chapel" was comparatively entire. There was the eastern gable perfect in form, with a high triple-arched window ; also the south wall, which, in addition to a central door, had another close to the eastern gable, with three windows overhead. And it is said part of the south wall of the church was standing until the beginning of 1788, when, the river having risen to an unusual height, it was swept away by the violence of the flood with part of the bank that had been used as a cemetery. Luckily, we have all the facts at hand regarding the history of this local relic of monasticism, and therefore need not be reminded, by way of caution, of the famous prtetorium of old Monkbarns. The Manuel nunnery, as we find from reliable relics, was founded by Malcolm IV. in 1156, and consecrated to the Virgin Mary. It was possessed, too, originally by Cistercian nuns—an order that derived its name from a district in Burgundy called Citeaux, where the first convent of that austere school was founded by ono St Robert, but which, of course, was simply an offshoot of the great Benedictine epoch. In 1292 the Prioress Christina swore fealty to Edward I., who, as we learn from a writ of his 'own, visited "Manewer on the 24th October, 1301. Alice, Christina's successor, also swore fealty to Edward, at Linlithgow, in 1296. Her tomb was to be seen here, some yearn ago bearing her figure with a distaff—an unusual instrument in the hands of a princess. The nunnery had possessions in the shires of Edinburgh and Ayr, as well as in those of Linlithgow and Stirling; and when the list of ecclesiastical revenues was drawn up in 1562, those of Manuel amounted to fifty-two pounds fourteen shillings and eightpence Scots, three chalders of here, seven chalders of meal, with a large quantity of salmon. The graveyard lay immediately beneath the nunnery, close upon a slight bend of the river; but for years the water current has been incessantly washing away the very foundations of the monastic burial-ground.

- 1707 GD332/48 Decreet of the Barony Court of Morwingside held at the Nuick before William Bell of Aventoun bailie of said barony, in the complaint at the instance of Patrick Broun portioner of Woodside, against John Dick of Middlequarter Margaret Mershell in Candieheid and

James Dick, her son, tenants of said John Dick, mentioning that the loan at the back of the Candie, which leads to Morwingside muir, past memory of man has always been a common loan to the muir for the use of the feuars and tenants of the barony of Morwingside and was never encroached upon till of late said John Dick and his tenants have encroached upon said loan and tilled up a great part thereof and sown it with corn and stopped the common passage to the muir, and threaten particularly to stop said Patrick Broun's carts, for which offence said John ought to be severely fined and punished, and said loan declared to be common, and said John and his tenants discharged to encroach thereupon for the future, and also said Margaret Mershell and her son have encroached upon pursuer's hedge and filled up his 'how furrow' with their ground and encroached upon a 'march baulk' in the Candie betwixt the pursuer's lands and theirs, for which they ought to be fined. Parties compeared and the bailie after hearing evidence finds and declares that the loan has been a common loan for forty years and upwards without interruption and that the pursuer and other heritors and tenants of the south side of the barony have been in use to pass there through with 'horse slaids carts etc.' to the muir, and that the pretended interruption alleged was not legal nor proven by sufficient witnesses, and also finds that said John Dick and Margaret Mershell and James Dick, her son, his tenants, have encroached upon and tilled said loan, therefore he fines them £50 Scots and ordains the loan to be common in all time coming for the passage of said Patrick Broun and other heritors and tenants of the south side of the barony to the muir with 'horse slaids carts etc.', and also finds said Margaret Mershell and her son have filled up the pursuer's 'How furrow' with their ground and encroached upon the march 'baulk' in Candie betwixt the pursuer and them, and therefore fines them £20 Scots; because the pursuer and defenders compearing personally on 3rd July, 1706, the pursuer adduced the witnesses following: John Calder of Hill, aged 60 or thereby, who deponed that for some years he had seen the pursuer and his father lead their 'elding' by the loan and never knew that it was stopped till now, and that said John Dick and his tenants have tilled up the old road, and further deponed that Margaret Mershell and her son have filled up the pursuer's 'How furrow' with their ground, and also that he had visited the march 'baulk' in the Candie about two years ago and at that time Margaret Mershell's plough had encroached upon the march 'baulk'. Patrick Calder of Ridfuird aged 58 or thereby, deponed that since he remembers he has known the loan to be a common road for the use of the barony to lead their 'elding' from the muir, and deponed similarly to preceding witnesses. Archibald Taylour portioner of Candie, aged 60 or thereby, and Robert Taylour in Seattries, aged 60 years and more, deponed likewise. The case was again called on 14th May, 1706, when pursuer compeared personally and defenders with Sebastian Henderson, their procurator, who produced John Dick's charter, dated 8th May, 1666, granted by Andrew Ross of Nuick of the lands of Candie and Burnpyke, and contended that the servitude libelled ought to be instructed by the pursuer by writ, and that servitude for forty years by use and wont had not been proved, and if such should be proved the defender offers to prove interruption within the forty years. The pursuer thereupon again adduced witnesses, viz., Robert Taylour in Seattries, who further deponed that he had known the road to have been a common road to the muir 40 years past and that the road went west by the foot of John Dick's land to the muir; and Thomas Mershell elder, in Plumb, aged 60 or thereby, who deponed that he had known the road in use likewise for 50 years. The bailie assigned to the defenders 31st May, 1706, to prove interruption, whereupon they adduced the witnesses following, viz., George Muire [Muir], sometime of Dykraw [Dykeraw], aged 40, who deponed that about 11 years since he was John Broun's tenant and was going to the muir with horses by the road in debate when he was interrupted by Margaret Mershell Compstoun's tenant, and that Pursuer's father told him when he took his land that he had no passage by said road, and while he was tenant he passed not by said road but another way throught Broun's own ground. Robert Carlaw, in Gillmeadowland, aged 40 or thereby, deponed that being pursuer's servant about 26 years ago he was interrupted on said road by William Dick, Compstoun's tenant, and John Broun deceased, was not allowed to pass that way until he took a piece of land from Dick, and then they passed that road by Dick's tolerance, and that before the land was taken Broun and his servants went to the muir by another road through his own land.

[5] Part of the Muir of Tarduff in the parish of Muiravonside.

The Writs in the progress of Titles to this property (which is of small value) do not shew the tenure, or what may be the yearly payment or casualties

Note 1: The solicitor who drew this up suggested the following: that the mansion House & offices, the Garden and Home Fields all belonged with [1], as did the railway sidings at Drumbowie, Woodend and Policy ground, half of Castlehill farm, the farm of Seatrees and Drumbowie Parks, 30 acres of Bowhouse, and possibly the ground occupied by the collier's houses; the other half of Castlehill lay with [4] & [5], while some cottages at the Loan and two at Newpark plus a stripe of land [an old rig presumably] at Wainrigg are assumed to belong either to [4] or [5]; the bulk of Bowhouse lay with [2] & [3], as did the sawmill at Bowhouse.

Note 2: The total area of the estate in the twentieth century was slightly in excess of 658 acres, but it should be noted that this did not include the area covered by either the railway or feus.

- 1710 GD332/54 Agreement by James Earl of Linlithgow, superior of the lands and baronies of Manuell, Walkmilntown, Myrehead, Almond and Ballinbreich, in the parish of Morowingsyde which have right to the commonty and muir of Morowingsyde and also for his vassals; Christian Eleis, relict of Colonel John Dalzell of Neuck, for herself, and as tutrix to Thomas Dalzell, her son, and Agnes Dalzell, her daughter, also heritors and superiors of the lands and barony of Morowingsyde which also have a right to said commonty and muir, and also for her vassals; William Bell, sheriff-clerk and town-clerk of Linlithgow, heritor and superior of the lands and barony of Manuael-Kerr alias Mannuall Foulis, which also have right to said commonty and muir, and for his vassals, and also for the heritors of Compstoun, Newmilne and Hungriehill whereby for the division of said commonty and muir they have chosen William Nimmo, portioner of Bridgehouse, John Tennent of Burnhead, John Wyse, in Sheelhill, and Andrew Russell, in Newdyck, or any three of them as arbiters to consider the several valuations and valued rents of said lands and to divide the muir and commonty in three parts relative to said lands and to be the property of said respective parties. Dated at Linlithgow 16 October, 1710. Witnesses to the subscription of said Earl, George Menzies, bailie of Falkirk, and James Lawson, servitor to said Earl; and to the subscriptions of said Christian Eleis and William Bell, John Storie, merchant, and Alexander Rule, baxter, burgesses of Linlithgow. Follows the Decreet-arbitral. The arbiters appointed Robert Walker, in Newbiggings, 'metster' [measurer] and find that the common muir extends to 1154 acres arable and 325 acres moss and flow. The valuation of the baronies of Ballinbreich, Almond and Manuell, belonging to said Earl in property and superiority, with part of the lands of Manuall-Kerr, which belongs in property to John Smith of Manuellrig, is £2594 7s. 2d. The valuation of the barony of Morrowingsyde belonging to said Thomas Dalzell in property and superiority is £848 8s. 10d. The valuation of Manuell-Kerr belonging in property and superiority to said William Bell, and said lands of Compstoun, is 532 11s. Total £3975 7s. Each £100 of valuation will get of arable land 28 acres 3 roods 16 falls, and of flow and moss 8 acres 20 falls; so that said Earl gets 753 acres arable and 213 acres moss, Thomas Dalzell gets 246 acres arable and 69 acres moss, William Bell gets 155 acres arable and 43 acres moss. The arbiters have accordingly set march-stones in order to divide said common muir beginning (with the portion to belong to said barony of Morrowingsyde) at the Hair stones on the southside of the muir where one hewn stone is infixed at the back side of the yard of the dwelling-house at said Hairstones presently possessed by Alexander Black, from thence leading northward to a hewn march-stone infixed upon the north-side of Drumbrother, from thence leading northwards through the moss to a hewn march-stone on the southside of the Wainrig, from thence bearing north northwest to the top of the wainrig where there is another hewn march-stone infixed, and which is the march-stone betwixt the baronies of Morrowingside and Manuellker upon the west, and from thence leading straight east and by north of the muir dyke upon the southside of the Whiterig yeat [gate] where there is a hewn march-stone infixed with several other hewn stones infixed upon the said straight line, and from thence leading along by the muir dyke to the first march-stone infixed at the said Hairstones. As also the muir and moss belonging heritable to Manuellker and Compstoun (excepting John Smith's valuation thereof in said barony added to the Earl of Linlithgow's valuation as above) begins at the said westmost and northmost march stone of the barony of Morrowingside and from thence running straight north, northwest over the east end of the Crossscrews to the southside of the little Grayrige where there is a hewn march stone infixed and which is the northmost march of the barony of Manuellker from thence turning straight east and by north to the muir dyke where there is a hewn march-stone infixed, from thence turning southward along by the muir dyke into the hewn march stone infixed upon the north side of the dyke or burn of Craigend and which march-stone is the southmost march of the barony of Manuellker upon the east and thence turns west and by south through the corner of the Bullenmoss to the east end of Blackrige where there is a hewn march-stone infixed, thence turning south to the march-stone of the barony of Morrowingside upon the southwest end of Drumbowie rig and the lands set apart for the Earl of Linlithgow and his vassals upon the Drumbowie rig lies straight west from the present room of Whiterig betwixt the southmost marches on the east quarter of the barony of Manuellker and northmost marches upon the east quarter of the barony of Morrowingsyde upon the south and north parts, the muir dyke on the east and the said march-stone on the southwest end of Drumbowie rig and the march-stone upon the east end of the said Blackrige upon the west parts; and the rest of the said whole muir and moss except what is within the foresaid dimensions allocated for the baronies of Morrowingside and Manuellker and lands of Compstoun the arbiters find that it belongs to said Earl and his vassals and the said John Smith: and therefore the arbiters declare find and ordain that the said 246 acres of arable ground and 69 acres of moss lying on the south side of said muir next to the said lands and barony of Morrowingsyde and marched as aforesaid pertain and belong in all time coming in property to said Thomas Dalyell and his vassals; and said 155 acres of arable land and 43 acres of moss lying on the southeast part of said muir next to the said barony of Manuellker (except what is allocated to said Earl of Linlithgow as above mentioned) and marched as above specified pertain and belong in all time coming in property to said William Bell and his vassals and the heritors of Compstoun [Compstone]; and the said 753 acres of arable land and 213 acres of moss being the rest of said whole common muir nor marched and appropriated to said baronies of Morrowingside and Mannuellker and lands of Compstoun pertain and belong in all time coming in property to said Earl of Linlithgow and his vassals and said John Smith, of which there are 71 acres of arable land lying west from the room of Whiterig marched and set apart to said Earl in part of his share of said muir. The forenamed persons and their vassals having right formerly to said commonty and their successors, their factors, tenants, tacksmen, servants, and others in their names shall have power to till, labour and manure their respective proportions of said commonty as divided, and to do all other acts of property thereupon by building houses, dykes and such like in all respects as if the same had been from the beginning divided and joined to their respective interests and former properties. It is specially provided that these presents shall not stop any highway, ways or roads that presently are and have been in use through said lands. Each heritor shall have free entry to said lands through those parts that shall belong to others and lie betwixt their former possession of property. The premises are to be implemented mutually under penalty of 1,000 merks. Written by Joseph Bartlay, servitor to said William Bell. Dated at Falkirk 11 August 1711. Witnesses, Alexander Watt, maltman in Falkirk, William Boig, servitor to John Morisone writer there, John Cowie, indweller there, and George Menzies clerk of Falkirk. 2 copies. 16/10/1710

- 1707 GD332/48 Decreet of the Barony Court of Morwingside held at the Nuick [Neuck] before William Bell of Aventoun bailie of said barony, in the complaint at the instance of Patrick Broun [Brown], portioner of Woodside, against John Dick of Middlequarter Margaret Mershell in Candieheid and James Dick, her son, tenants of said John Dick, mentioning that the loan at the back of the Candie, which leads to Morwingside muir, past memory of man has always been a common loan to the muir for the use of the feuars and tenants of the barony of Morwingside and was never encroached upon till of late said John Dick and his tenants have encroached upon said loan and tilled up a great part thereof and sown it with corn and stopped the common passage to the muir, and threaten particularly to stop said Patrick Broun's [Brown] carts, for which offence said John ought to be severely fined and punished, and said loan declared to be common, and said John and his tenants discharged to encroach thereupon for the future, and also said Margaret Mershell and her son have encroached upon pursuer's hedge and filled up his 'how furrow' with their ground and encroached upon a 'march baulk' in the Candie betwixt the pursuer's lands and theirs, for which they ought to be fined. Parties compeared and the bailie after hearing evidence finds and declares that the loan has been a common loan for forty years and upwards without interruption and that the pursuer and other heritors and tenants of the south side of the barony have been in use to pass there through with 'horse slaid carts etc.' to the muir, and that the pretended interruption alleged was not legal nor proven by sufficient witnesses, and also finds that said John Dick and Margaret Mershell and James Dick, her son, his tenants, have encroached upon and tilled said loan, therefore he fines them £50 Scots and ordains the loan to be common in all time coming for the passage of said Patrick Broun [Brown] and other heritors and tenants of the south side of the barony to the muir with 'horse slaid carts etc.', and also finds said Margaret Mershell and her son have filled up the pursuer's 'How furrow' with their ground and encroached upon the march 'baulk' in Candie betwixt the pursuer and them, and therefore fines them £20 Scots; because the pursuer and defenders compearing personally on 3rd July, 1706, the pursuer adduced the witnesses following: John Calder of Hill, aged 60 or thereby, who deponed that for some years he had seen the pursuer and his father lead their 'elding' by the loan and never knew that it was stopped till now, and that said John Dick and his tenants have tilled up the old road, and further deponed that Margaret Mershell and her son have filled up the pursuer's 'How furrow' with their ground, and also that he had visited the march 'baulk' in the Candie about two years ago and at that time Margaret Mershell's plough had encroached upon the march 'baulk'. Patrick Calder of Ridfuird aged 58 or thereby, deponed that since he remembers he has known the loan to be a common road for the use of the barony to lead

their 'elding' from the muir, and deponed similarly to preceding witnesses. Archibald Taylour portioner of Candie, aged 60 or thereby, and Robert Taylour in Seattries, aged 60 years and more, deponed likewise. The case was again called on 14th May, 1706, when pursuer compeared personally and defenders with Sebastian Henderson, their procurator, who produced John Dick's charter, dated 8th May, 1666, granted by Andrew Ross of Nuick [Neuck] of the lands of Candie and Burnpyke, and contended that the servitude libelled ought to be instructed by the pursuer by writ, and that servitude for forty years by use and wont had not been proved, and if such should be proved the defender offers to prove interruption within the forty years. The pursuer thereupon again adduced witnesses, viz., Robert Taylour in Seattries, who further deponed that he had known the road to have been a common road to the muir 40 years past and that the road went west by the foot of John Dick's land to the muir; and Thomas Mershell elder, in Plumb, aged 60 or thereby, who deponed that he had known the road in use likewise for 50 years. The bailie assigned to the defenders 31st May, 1706, to prove interruption, whereupon they adduced the witnesses following, viz., George Muire [Muir], sometime of Dykraw [Dykeraw], aged 40, who deponed that about 11 years since he was John Broun's [Brown] tenant and was going to the muir with horses by the road in debate when he was interrupted by Margaret Mershell Compstoun's tenant, and that Pursuer's father told him when he took his land that he had no passage by said road, and while he was tenant he passed not by said road but another way through Broun's [Brown] own ground. Robert Carlaw, in Gillmeadowland, aged 40 or thereby, deponed that being pursuer's servant about 26 years ago he was interrupted on said road by William Dick, Compstoun's tenant, and John Broun [Brown], deceased, was not allowed to pass that way until he took a piece of land from Dick, and then they passed that road by Dick's tolerance, and that before the land was taken Broun [Brown] and his servants went to the muir by another road through his own land. 8/7/1707

1726 GD332/64 Minutes in action by Mr John McClowd advocate, against the vassals of Murevensyde. McCleod repeats his charge founded on a decret before the baron bailie of Murevenside and craved that the letters might be found orderly proceeded. Boswall (advocate for the suspenders - the vassals) repeats his reasons for suspension: (1) That the baron bailie had committed iniquity in sustaining process against them for the multures of their whole grindable corns, since neither they nor their predecessors were in use to pay multure for any of their corns except oats, and that past memory of man, and as thirlage of the growing corns in their charters is limited to use and wont the practice is determined that only oats are astricted. (2) That they had prescribed immunity as to all other grain except oats. (3) That the bere not being ground at the mill must be liable to a less multure. (4) That the teinds are not deducted although they should be excluded as the vassals had right to them through the Earl of Callender. Hay and Craigie (advocates for the charger - McCloud) answer that in the charters granted by him as superior holding of the Crown the reddendo contains a restriction of all growing corns to his mill of the barony, and that 'use and wont' does not apply to the grain but to the quantity of multure which is not expressed in the charter. The clause of astriction was so extensive as to include even teinds, the only exception being seed and horse corn. Indeed the vassals beyond memory of man have paid multure for stock and teind. The Lord (of Session) finds the suspenders' whole corns astricted and prescription cannot run against their charters, that 'used and wont' only refers to multures as to the quantity of which suspenders are ordained to condescend; and as to the teinds makes avizandum to the Lords. 28/6/1726

Contract between Mr John Macleod of Muiravonside advocate, superior of the barony, on the one part, and Andrew Dick of Compstoun Mr John Henderson of Candy, Patrick Calder of Reidfoord Peter Marshall of Crewhill as taking burden for John Calder of Hill, his pupil, Patrick Brown and John Taylor, portioners of Woodside, John Binny Alexander Miller and James Schaw portioners of Coxhill, John Reid and Alexander Brown, portioners of Candyhead and Archibald Taylor, portioner of Candyhead vassals of said barony, on the other part, narrating that there is a process of multures at present before the Lords of Council and Session between them, and that several interlocutors have been pronounced in favour of said Mr John Macleod, and now seeing he is willing to discharge said process and hereby discharges the same and all bygone multures preceding the term of Martinmas 1726, therefore the vassals bind themselves to pay to said Mr John Macleod, and his heirs and successors, superiors of said barony, 3 bolls 2 pecks of beir, 8 pecks peas or peas and beans yearly of the growth of their lands within the barony and that as additional feuduty as the same shall be apportioned among them according to their valuations, and to be paid as from Martinmas 1727 in lieu of multure of what beir and peas or beans they shall happen to sell of the growth of their lands, and they bind themselves to bring to the mill of the barony and grind there what beir, peas or beans they shall consume in their family, paying therefor 1/2 peck of the grain and 1/2 peck meal for each boll of beir and peas or beans so ground at said mill, and they bind themselves to grind at said mill their oats teinds (seed and horse corn excepted). Written by John Robertson, writer in Edinburgh. Dated at the Bridgend of Linlithgow 6th November, 1727; witnesses there, James Monteith of Milnhall, Alexander Crawford, younger of Manuelmiln [Manuel Mill], and said John Robertson; and at the gardener's house of Neuck 9th November, 1727; witnesses there, Mr Thomas Young, 'presenter' of Muiravonside, Alexander Blair, gardener at Neuck, and said Alexander Crawford and John Robertson. 6-9 Nov 1727

1860 OSNB	Sighthill (stone coffins containing human remains found here in 1838, and 1852). A long narrow ridge of slightly elevated land, partly arable and partly wooded. Some few years since the N.E. face of the hill bore trace of having been fortified, the land is now cultivated, and all evidence of fortification entirely removed. It has, doubtless, been the scene of a conflict, from the number of stone coffins found at it at the time improvements were taking place on the Edinburgh & Glasgow Road which crosses it. Stone coffins have also been discovered in it at a more recent date, by workmen engaged in digging for gravel in the adjacent gravel pit. All these coffins contained human remains. It is on the property of Wm Forbes Esq, Callendar House, Falkirk

Slamannan - A tolerable sized village built very irregular, situated near the northern extremity of the parish. Most of the house originally forming it are on storey, thatched and tenanted by agricultural labourers, but since the railway has been opened and the consequent working of the vast coalfield throughout the parish the importance of the village has considerably improved, both in size and appearance. A number of substantial two storey houses having been erected, the ground floors of which are used as shops. There is the parish church, school and manse, together with the manse and school of the Free Church, Post Office, and two public houses, in addition to the numerous shops. There is a small round artificial eminence a short distance north of the parish church, said to be one of the ancient seats of judication, and a little to the east of the same is the Holy Well of St Lawrence, to which saint the old parish church of Slamannan was dedicated. These are the only antiquities which the village is said to possess. A small gas work has been established in the village during the past year, so that the interior of most of the houses is now lighted with gas. The parish is called Slamannan and St Lawrence. The former is generally used and the latter is only found in the records of Session, and in the presentation of the Crown "the church and parish of Slamannan otherwise St Lawrence". It is highly probable that St Lawrence was not the original name of the parish, but only of the church, and the lands adjoining to it; for a little to the south-east of the church, there is an excellent spring of water which still goes by the name of St Lawrence's Well. As places of worship were frequently denominated from particular saints, St Lawrence would appear to have been the titular saint of this parish. But the etymology of the name Slamannan is, like that of many other proper names, uncertain, and merely conjectural. Some writers have supposed that the word signifies Slender River, that is "place on slender part of river". Others have derived it from the following circumstance; that when the Earl of Callendar sent to plough a certain portion of the parish (then a moor) he inquired of the steward on his return how it would work, to which the answer was, "It slay both man and mare". Others have supposed that from its vicinity to the Caledonian forest, it had often been the scene of conflict. In proof of which, there is a rising ground, a little to the south of the church, called Castlehill, where a fort once stood, but of which no vestige remains, excepting the farmhouse, which still goes by the name Castle-hill, and a little to the eastward of this hill, there is another rising ground where there are still some remains of a trench, and which goes by the name of Kill-hills, because of the numbers which were supposed to have been slain there. Besides there were adjacent to these, two cones of earth about forty yards separate, which are supposed to have been raised as monuments of peace, like the two at Dunipace. One of these still remains, and is evidently artificial; the other was levelled and the church of St Lawrence built upon it; the former still goes by the name of the Moat. The names of these places, with others of similar import, such as Balcastle, Balquhatston & c, confirm the belief that these grounds have been the arena of many a severe battle. In the Session records the name is always spelt Slamanna dropping the latter n. It is highly probable that the name is of Gaelic origin, purporting brown, or grey, or long heath, for the parish must have been originally covered with heath.

"This parish is bounded on the west and south-west, by the parish of New Monkland; on the east and south-east, by the parish of Torphichen; and on the north and north-east, by Muiravonside, and Falkirk. At the north-west extremity there is a point where three counties meet, viz Stirling, Dumbarton and Lanark; and on the south, there is another point where the counties of Stirling and Lanark meet with the county of Linlithgow" (Statistical Account).

There is no detached portions of this parish; nor are there any detached portions of any other parish situated within it. The parish contains about 7148 statute acres.
